

ABSTRACT

This invention relates to a flexible light conduit having two ends, one end mounted to an outdoor support such as a roof and at it's other end to a ceiling or other support inside a structure such as a house, garage, shed or other structure, said light conduit being of any shape in crosssection, preferably square or rectangular and lined with any material or combination of materials for insulation, ornamentation and the like.